Past performance may or may not be sustained in future.

b. Future Outlook:

Debt Market outlook:

The Urjit Patel Committee Report of January 2014 has been the guiding force behind Governor Rajan's monetary policy framework. RBI's monetary policy actions since then have been closely aligned with the evolution of headline CPI and RBI's assessment of inflationary expectations. Having achieved its January 2016 CPI target of 6% (actual at 5.69%), RBI's focus will now shift towards achieving further progress in its disinflationary path and meeting its January 2017 CPI target of 5%.

Further, liquidity neutral framework will imply that the Repo rate will no longer be as relevant as the policy rate; instead RBI will move towards term repo/ term reverse repos for targeting short term rates.

Money Market

Money market yields continued to ease sharply amid comfortable liquidity – CP segment witnessed heavy issuances in 2-3 M segment with yields easing by 5-8 bps. The three months Commercial Paper yield closed at around 7.85 levels on 15th June 2016.

Liquidity will continue to remain in the comfortable zone and might come under pressure in September 2016 on account of advance tax payments.

Sovereign Bond Yields

On the sovereign bond segment, we see the 10-yr range between 7.40%-7.55% during the June-July period. The 10yr GOI-SDL spread is likely to move between 60-75bps depending on the issuance levels. RBI has already conducted INR 700bn of OMOs purchases in the first two months of FY2017 compared with INR 631bn in the whole of FY2016. Besides injecting long term liquidity, OMO purchases will also serve to support GOI prices.

On the corporate bond front, given the balance sheet issues evident in much of the banking sector, an increasing proportion of private sector financing requirements will also likely be financed through the domestic bond markets. The continued supply of bonds in the secondary market through FPI liquidation, the emerging demand-supply scenario suggests that GOI-corporate bond spreads are likely to widen going ahead.

Inflation Outlook

The Consumer Price Index (CPI) rose 5.76% in May, from a revised 5.47% in April, mainly because of an increase in food prices. Further, the Krishi Kalyan cess of 0.5% to build rural infrastructure in India, which kicked in from 1 June, 2016 on all taxable services, is expected to add to inflationary pressure, along with the recent hikes in petrol and diesel prices.

Going forward the monsoon will be a critical factor which will drive the inflation numbers. Food Inflation is a major contributor to CPI numbers and monsoon would play a vital role in easing that. The expectations of a normal monsoon supply management measures and the introduction of the electronic national agriculture market (e-NAM) trading portal, should moderate unanticipated flares of food inflation.

LIC MF INTERVAL FUND MONTHLY PLAN SERIES-1

Expectations from RBI policy meet on August 09 2016

Our expectations from the RBI policy meet on August 09 2016, clearly rests on the evolving inflation at the time which will significantly be dependent on global crude prices, fructification of IMD's prediction of good monsoons. We believe that the monetary policy is likely to be increasingly focused on transmission of already implemented easing measures. Quantum and timing of OMO purchases likely to become a much more important variable in determining the directionality of market interest rates. We see a possibility 25bps rate cut going forward. However the key risks to the view are possible monsoon failure, disruptive impact of Fed policy normalization and any discontinuity in RBI leadership.
